Then everything begins from there: it is from there that, after the coming of the Holy Spirit, the good news of salvation is spread to the four corners of the inhabited world. As regards Paul, although his apostolate did not begin from Jerusalem, Gahe considers communion with the Jerusalem Church to be indispensable. The city becomes the symbol of eschatological fulfilment both in future and in present dimension. Thus, aided by a symbolic intensification already well attested in the Old Testament itself, the Church will always recognise the bonds that intimately unite it to the history of Jerusalem and its Temple, as well as to the prayer and cult of the Jewish people.
